Program: Education reform and youth development

Eligibility: The foundation supports various organizations designed to foster new ideas and public policy on a variety of issues that benefit society, such as: public policy research, health and human services aligned with major therapeutic interests, academic relations, culture, education and youth development, community development, locally-aligned health care organizations, fencerow neighborhood groups, and diversity.

Purpose: Lilly and its foundation are interested in addressing the issues of k-12 education reform and youth development as the most significant issues of concern of its home-based communities. Projects that target parental involvement, establishing and raising educational standards, and the development of improved teaching techniques and better prepared teachers are of particular interest. The foundation supports organizations that have a well defined sense of purpose, a demonstrated commitment to maximizing available resources, and a reputation for meeting objectives and delivering quality program and services.
