Foundation: The Wallace Foundation

Summary: The Wallace Foundation is focusing on strategies to help principals and superintendents be more effective in their work. Without strong leaders to run schools and districts, efforts to produce changes that yield quality instruction for all students - especially in America's low-performing public schools - are not likely to succeed or be sustained. This emphasis on education leadership builds on the Foundation's past work to improve teaching and learning in schools. Learning in Communities is a city-based strategy to provide as many low- and moderate-income children as possible with the benefits of meaningful participation in after-school activities. It aims to improve program quality, improve participation and build local systems that ensure standards, sustainability and accountability for high-quality after-school programs financed with public and private resources.
